

DIRECT ENERGY WEAPONS AGENCY,

“Progress alongside Safety & Protection”.

From the President,

The Direct Energy Weapons Agency, a pioneering organization at the forefront of addressing the criminal use of directed energy weapons, continues to make strides in its critical mission despite navigating the challenges that come with being the first of its kind. The agency's commitment to progress is exemplified by the tireless efforts of its specialized divisions.

The Havana Syndrome Organization, dedicated to raising awareness about the debilitating health incidents affecting diplomats, intelligence officers and their families worldwide, is preparing for its second annual Havana Syndrome Awareness Month. This initiative aims to continue to shed light on these types of energy attacks, foster public understanding, and galvanize support for those afflicted. Concurrently, the DEW Police division remains steadfast in its vital work, processing reports from victims of directed energy attacks while gathering and analyzing data to support ongoing investigations by security agencies. These investigations, often complex and multifaceted, seek to unravel the complexities of these crimes and bring perpetrators to justice.

Recognizing the physical, psychological & financial impact on those affected by directed energy harassments & assaults, the Victims of Directed Energy Division offers a lifeline of support through its weekly Monday call-in meetings. These gatherings provide a safe haven where Victims can connect, share their experiences, and find solace in the knowledge that they are not alone in their struggles. As the Direct Energy Weapons Agency navigates this uncharted territory, our determination and unwavering commitment to our mission serve as a beacon of hope for those affected and a testament to the human spirit in the face of multiple challenges. Ms. Mechael Wright-Hodges, www.dewagency.org
